Founded in 1963 the Chinese Studies Department at the University of Malaya is the world’s earliest established sinological education and research organization and has for a rather long time been the only such organization. At the time of its inception the faculty of University of Malaya’s Chinese Studies Department consisted of many senior professors recruited from abroad, such as Fu Wu-kang, Chen Qi-yun, Qian Mu, Chen Tie-fan, Want Shu-min and others. These international scholars for the benefit of Malaysians, and especially its Chinese society, set-up a solid foundation for Sinological Studies and paved the way for generations of Malaysian Master and Doctoral graduates, including those educated in this department. In comparison with Chinese studies or other sinological research organizations of the greater China diaspora, the University of Malaya has encountered many internal and external restrictions in its development, but has...
