Engaging Moral Agency for Human Rights: Outlooks From the Global South

Kathleen Malley-Morrison
Boston University

Ellen Gutowski
Boston College

Maria Regina E. Estuar
Ateneo de Manila University

Mahlon P. Dalley
Eastern Washington University

Eros DeSouza
Illinois State University

Sherri McCarthy
Northern Arizona University-Yuma

Nisha Raj
Emory University

Darshini Shah
Dreamcatchers, Mumbai, India

Ross Caputi
Fitchburg State University

Tristyn Campbell
Mental Health Association of Nassau County, Hempstead, New York

Jacqueline Akhurst
York St. John University

Luciana Karine de Souza
Federal University of Minas Gerais

Jas Laile Suzana Binti Jaafar
University of Malaya

Ellora Puri
University of Jammu

Natoschica Scruggs
U.S. Department of State, Washington, DC

Michael J. Stevens
Illinois State University

A sample of 1,043 participants from 3 regions in the Global South (South and Southeast Asia, Africa, and Latin America) responded to the Personal and Institutional Rights to Kathleen Malley-Morrison earned an EdD from Boston University, where she is currently a professor in the Department of Psychological and Brain Sciences. Her research interests focus on violence and nonviolence, war, torture, terrorism, peace, and reconciliation. Ross Caputi received an MA in linguistics from the University of Delaware, and he is currently working on an MA in English studies at Fitchburg State University. His research interests include rhetoric and discourse analysis. Ellen Gutowski received her BA in psychology from St. Mary’s College of Maryland and is currently pursuing a master’s in counseling from the Lynch School of Education at Boston College. Her research interests include the promotion of nonviolence, poverty reduction, and the adolescent to adult transition across socioeconomic and international contexts.

Tristyn Campbell received her BA in psychology from Boston University. She was the lab manager for the Group on International Perspectives on Governmental Aggression and Peace for 2 years, and then took on a position of counselor for the Mental Health Association of Nassau County in Hempstead, New York. Maria Regina Estuar received her MS in computer science from the Department of Information Systems and Computer Science and her PhD in social psychology from the Department of Psychology at the Ateneo de Manila University, Philippines. She holds an associate professor position at the University and heads the Social Computing Laboratory. Her research interests include quantifying and modeling human understanding of social phenomena including peace and conflict.

continued