
Population Ageing and Social Protection in Malaysia

Dr. Jumari Mohd. Kassim
Department of Administration, Public Policy, and Management Studies, International Islamic University, Malaysia

Abstract

The New Economic Model for Malaysia (NEM) 2010 advocates inclusiveness as one of the three pillars of a developed society in the next decade beyond the mid-century. The multidimensional and complex nature of the multiplicity of objectives of the plan is to enable every Malaysian to have bipolar prospects of the future. This paper is to examine the Malaysian policy towards population ageing and social protection in order to contribute to the economy and to ensure that essential opportunities in the economy to contribute to the economy and to ensure that essential opportunities are seized to support the objectives of economic development. This paper is to examine the Malaysian policy towards population ageing and social protection in order to contribute to the economy and to ensure that essential opportunities are seized to support the objectives of economic development. This paper is to examine the Malaysian policy towards population ageing and social protection in order to contribute to the economy and to ensure that essential opportunities are seized to support the objectives of economic development.