Of women, professionalism and Doraemon in the time of Covid-19 — Academy of Medicine of Malaysia

Thursday, 02 April 2020 11:52 AM MYT

By Chin Tong

A woman's value goes beyond servitude to another, nor is it constricted by her social class. We are all born equal, as is the case in Malaysia, and Malaysia aspires to be a developed nation. The Ministry of Women, Family, and Community Development (MoWFCD) in its turn, should ensure that the country does not allow gender-based stereotypes to hinder its aspirations to be a developed nation. As such, the Ministry of Women, Family, and Community Development should ensure that the country does not allow gender-based stereotypes to hinder its aspirations to be a developed nation.

It is crucial that women, especially those in the professions, are treated with respect and dignity. The Ministry should ensure that these women are not regarded as second-class citizens in their pursuit of success in their chosen careers. Women should not be reduced to being submissive wives or mothers, nor should they be stereotyped as being weak or insecure. Instead, they should be recognized for their intelligence, creativity, and contributions to society.

In addition, the Ministry should take a proactive role in promoting gender equality and empowering women. It should encourage women to participate in decision-making processes and ensure that their voices are heard. The Ministry should also provide women with access to education and training programs, as well as financial support, to help them achieve their full potential.

Moreover, the Ministry should be proactive in addressing gender-based violence and harassment. It should ensure that women have access to adequate legal protection and support services. The Ministry should also work with other government agencies and non-governmental organizations to raise awareness about gender-based violence and promote positive gender stereotypes.

Finally, the Ministry should be proactive in promoting diversity and inclusion. It should ensure that women from all walks of life, including those from marginalized communities, have access to opportunities and resources. The Ministry should also work with the private sector and civil society organizations to promote diversity and inclusion.

In conclusion, the Ministry of Women, Family, and Community Development should be proactive in promoting gender equality and empowering women. It should encourage women to participate in decision-making processes and ensure that their voices are heard. The Ministry should also provide women with access to education and training programs, as well as financial support, to help them achieve their full potential.

Chin Tong

© 2020, Malay Mail, All Rights Reserved.